Build your own learning plan.

When most people think about learning, they imagine traditional classrooms, huge time commitments and exponential costs.

70%

of your learning opportunities should be on-the-go or on-the-job and easily built into your daily routines.

20%

of learning opportunities occur during peer-to-peer interactions.

10%

will fall into the traditional formats of classes, webinars and conferences.

How will you spend your time?

Mark which of these activities you currently do (left) and which you can imagine incorporating in the future (right).

- Reading blogs and articles from trusted resources
- Reading books, ebooks or listening to audiobooks
- Listening to podcasts on pertinent subjects
- Listening to pertinent flash briefings
- Watching pertinent YouTube videos
- Reading pertinent LinkedIn articles
- Presenting to colleagues
- Explaining a concept to a co-worker
- Attending lunch and learns
- Seeking answers to questions/problems
